Abstract

Children often endanger themselves while using the Internet because they don't have the elements that make them aware of what they should do and what they should not do, especially nowadays when everything is widely available through millions of websites on the internet that make them happy and enjoy spending most of their time on the internet. As we know that the children have the spontaneity that make them act without consideration or attention to any advice or control from their parents that causes many problems and puts them in danger and violations. We currently need a law that protects online children's privacy from violations. I discussed the right to privacy in the first chapter as I defined it in the first section. There were two narrow and wide directions, and then I talked about the nature of the right to privacy. Regarding the second topic, I discussed legislation on the right to privacy and the situation of the UAE legislature. The second chapter dealt with the privacy of the child in the challenges of the Internet and discussed through it the Child Protection Act (COPPA) as well as the applications of Apple and Google and its compatibility with the Child Protection Law also discussed the situation of UAE law on the protection of the privacy of children.

Keywords: Right to privacy, Child rights, Coppa law.
